New Financial Literacy Resources for Residents and Fellows

Dear all:

Several of you have asked for additional financial resources to help deal with loans, debt, and money management skills. Attached is information about a new service sponsored by the Association of American Medical Colleges (AAMC). Please take a look and let me know what you think.

Best,

Bobby Baron
GME

New Financial Literacy Resources for Medical Students, Residents

The AAMC has collaborated with American Student Assistance (ASA) to help academic medicine community members strengthen their financial literacy and money management skills. ASA’s program, SALT™, is a financial education and engagement program that empowers students and alumni to manage, pay for, and pay back college costs while improving their financial literacy skills. SALT’s financial education resources are now available to medical students, residents, faculty, and staff at AAMC-member institutions. The AAMC also will be hosting a webinar at 3 p.m. ET on Jan. 22 for students and advisers about the new Fee Assistance Program and financing medical school.