If you had to do anything differently in the residency matching process, what would it be?

I would have tried to reach out to program directors and residents from combined programs earlier with my questions, since there were few advisors at UCSF who knew about the combined programs.

Perhaps do away rotations to have a better idea of the programs, however, we were mostly discouraged to do so.

Is there any other information helpful to UCSF students who will apply to your specialty choice in the future?

Combined pediatrics-anesthesia programs are relatively new and unique, so I would highly recommend talking to UCSF advisors from both departments as well as program directors and residents at the combined programs to get a better understanding of whether the program would be a good fit for your interests.

It is a very expensive process, be sure to work carefully with your advisor as to avoid apply to too many programs.
